

Music Sense

A Sales and Marketing Engine for Independent Artists

Music Sense (a.k.a. "The Music Sense Project") is a brand new business model which aims to help independent musicians succeed and be financially successful in their careers. As such, Music Sense isn't just a music streaming service like the rest of the industry.

It is completely unique in focus, approach, and application of technology.

Music Sense is a sales and marketing engine, providing custom tools, resources, and education, necessary for business and commerce so they get more traffic, leads and sales.

Built for artists by an artist, Music Sense is a platform designed to empower artists and grant them control of their careers in a way the current industry has failed to do, instead of exploiting artists for profit.

What follows in this presentation is an outline of The Music Sense Project and immediate goals, as well as accomplishments.

My Vision

The Origin Story

Music Sense was never just some idea. As a musician since childhood (more than 20 years) music has always been a passion, but helping other artists didn't become a personal goal of mine until several years ago.

I was teaching music at the Eubank's Center for Music in Durham, NC, I had just published my first book, Music for the Simple Man, as well as published my first classical music score for strings.

What I was doing to promote myself was unique as far as anything the music industry had seen; being an engineer gave me access to Internet marketing long before it became so popular.

Seeing that I was getting uncommon results, many artists came to me asking about the strategies I used.

For many years I relied on the very same strategies, "grinding" to become successful, but it never worked, so I turned to the Internet.

One day another artist came to me and gave me his album. He said he was tired of grinding and was giving up music to go and do something else.

He also said, "Whatever I can do with this (album), keep it."

For nearly my entire life music was my passion and my place of peace. Whenever I need to think or get away from the world, music was that refuge. It was the thing that kept me out of trouble growing up and the thing that allowed me to bring joy into another's life, so watching another artist give up on music was an eye-opener for me.

That was the moment that I realized that I wanted to dedicate my career to helping artists find success in their careers.

The Idea for Music Sense

The idea for Music Sense itself came after several years of other projects that came and went with the times, from building websites for artists, to running a radio station for independent music.

As the Internet became more and more popular, it became very obvious that there had to be a change in the way business was done.

Selling CDs on corners and getting booked to play gigs was becoming less and less responsive, and on top of that, because people were no longer buying entire albums, but individual songs, the industry itself had changed to compensate.

A million sales as little as 10 years ago meant more than a million dollars in profits. The average album sold for around $9.00; and today, a million sales, after all fees and dues were paid, was only a few hundred thousand dollars.

And even that became something that only the very top earned.

Then, the industry saw the rise of third party music services, which provided basic services to artists, but the business model was designed around making money from artists, not helping artists succeed.

Artists quickly found themselves bound to contracts, signing away their music rights, and many even winding up in debt over dues to big labels. Third party services were no better.

Artists would sign up for their services, pay them for “upgrades” to their service, do all the work of marketing, only to be faced with companies that took a cut of sales, on top of being paid already, and artists were waiting for those companies to cut them checks – and the more successful an artist became, the more those services cost.

The Music Sense Project came about as a way to restore the order: To give artists back control of their career and ownership of their music, provide tools for them to run a real business, provide education and sales training, and be the support for their career.

No contracts, no signing away rights, they keep 100% of their profit, get paid directly and interact with their audience directly – In other words, they get the freedom over their career that the industry has denied them.

Introducing Music Sense

Laying the Foundation

What does it take to run a successful business, and what does it take for an artist to be truly independent?

In a nutshell, to run a successful business and be truly independent, an artist needs to have a platform in place that:

1. Allows them to host their music
2. Make it available to anyone, on any device (traffic)
3. Be able to build lists of prospects (leads)
4. And conduct transaction (sales)

Beyond that, artists must have the technology to be able to carry out marketing and track information essential to their continued success.

In short, they need a platform that facilitates, at its core, the functions necessary to conduct business, manage data, and deliver content.

This is where Music Sense starts – a core set of services that is essential to success.

With Music Sense, Artists can:

- Build an unlimited list of email and mobile subscribers.
- Embed promote and sell their music from their own site.
- Broadcast updates and announcements with one click.
- Sell offline and on mobile with built in marketing tools.
- Launch and track campaigns with web and QR analytics.
- Boost sales on their iTunes, Reverb, CD Baby and other sites.
- Manage multiple musicians if they had their own label.
- Target real listeners, not just other musicians.
- Promote Audio & Video
- And much more...

The tools created for artists are also unlimited.

Unlike other music-based services, Music Sense doesn't increase in cost the more popular an artist becomes. We don't punish artists for being more successful.

Music Sense also offers many advantages that other services can't, or won't offer.

1. When other services are built around recruiting artists, Music Sense targets the public and the open market. After all, what's the point of using a music service, if the majority of people who see it will be other musicians?
2. Our native SEO (search engine optimization) is built to target artist names and song titles – this is what most people search for when buying songs. As a result of focusing on the public and providing built-in SEO, many of Music Sense search engine rankings dominate the search engines.

For example, many searches show up first, on the first page of Google, Bing and others.

These successes weren't accidents.

Even in a BETA phase and during development, Music Sense has been meeting the needs of more than a dozen independent musicians and artists, hosted music archives for radio stations, and have even provided business services for entrepreneurs and independent marketers.

The tools we design, resources we provide, and education we provide serve one purpose – to help musician succeed, free of the encumbrances of an industry built around exploiting them.

Business Model

How We Make Profits without Exploiting Artists

Music Sense is built on the premise that independent artists are business owners. It's why the tools are built around giving them complete freedom and autonomy without contracts, and without encroaching on their profits or rights.

But how do we make money if we aren't doing what the industry does?

Like any business, all business owners pay for services that help their business succeed.

This is why Music Sense was built as a sales and marketing engine, not a music streaming service, so instead of having to rely on taking a cut of profits, musicians will be paying for a basic service that increases in price depending on their specific needs.

Here is a summary:

Taken from the live BETA, service plans start at a basic $60/per year for individual artists and scale to around $850 per year.

Prices are set by business type and level of service needed, so an individual artist who's trying to get started or is just running a solo career has access to specific tools to help him succeed.

Whereas a broadcast company who requires much more, will pay a higher price to meet their needs.

But this is just the beginning...

Music Sense is, in and of itself, a valuable resource which can be leveraged for profit in other ways, without further expensing members.

With some creativity, we are able to earn profits by:

- Selling affiliate products for commissions
- Providing paid advertising placement on our site
- Providing artist placement in venues
- Selling access information to event promoters
- Hosting our own concerts and events
- Providing 'premium' membership for the public
- And much more

All of these things are currently in the process of being developed and implemented.
